We have to get this right

Because I was in the military and then employed by the airlines, I’ve lived all around our country. Some municipalities got a head start on open space, others didn’t. I feel open space is critical to the quality of life, and preserving farmland should be one of the top priorities. Cape Elizabeth’s Open Space Zoning Ordinance was developed to do just that. It states that land can be preserved as open space “in a manner that preserves active agricultural fields for agricultural use,” and defines farmland as a 5 acre minimum.

An agricultural easement is being proposed as open space in the Maxwell Woods development, to “save farmland,” yet this parcel is only 2.07 acres, does not appear to be actively farmed, and is assessed as a vacant residential lot. The Town will hold the easement permanently, which means it needs to oversee the land to be sure all the restrictions are being followed.

In the future what will happen to this 2.07 acre parcel? If the current owners sell it, will the new owner be required to maintain this parcel as agricultural land, and how will the town enforce that? As there is no road access to this land, how will the new owners access it and be in the equipment to maintain it?

When the ordinance was written to preserve open space with farmland as a priority, wasn’t this directed at the large actively farmed fields and not a smaller residential lot?

A Planning Board member made a comment at one of the early meetings about the Maxwell Woods agricultural easement, “We need to get this right because it’s the first time this is being done.” I couldn’t agree more, and it certainly doesn’t seem right to me.

Pete Dixon

Dangerous precedent should be avoided

Preserving open space is of great importance to our town. The Open Space Zoning Ordinance is designed to allow greater density of development in order to preserve more open space that benefits the community. This ordinance was drafted after years of citizen input, community studies and surveys, and guided by the Comprehensive Plan. In the proposed Maxwell Woods subdivision, a 2 acre parcel is being called an “agricultural easement”, yet this parcel does not meet the definition of agricultural open space in the ordinance.

Residents have raised this concern since the public hearings began in January. Now, after granting preliminary approval, the Planning Board wishes to change the ordinance in order to allow the development to proceed as currently proposed. A change in a zoning ordinance affects the whole town and generations to come, and needs to be done through a community wide process.

As the new Comprehensive Plan Committee is engaged again in this thoughtful process, I strongly recommend that any revisions to the open space zoning ordinance will not be considered until there is guidance from a new Comprehensive Plan. To rush to change an ordinance to meet the needs of a particular project sets a dangerous precedent.

Becky Fernald

Smoke and mirrors

The Planning Board recently granted preliminary approval to the Maxwell Woods development, for 46 units on 18 acres. The town ordinance requires the developer to set aside 45% of the land, over 8 acres, as “open space”, which will be permanently preserved. Ironically, the beautiful pine forest for which Maxwell Woods is named, will be demolished to make room for this project.

Questions about whether the proposed open space complies with town ordinances have been asked continuously since January during the public hearing process. When it was asked how a 2 acre parcel, owned by a separate party, could count towards the developer’s open space, the other party was signed on as “co-applicants” the day before the Board voted on preliminary approval. When asked how this 2 acre parcel could qualify as an “agricultural easement” when it doesn’t comply with the existing ordinance about preserving farmland, the Planning Board is now proposing changes to this ordinance.

The Planning Board needs to play by the rules developed by the town, and not change ordinances midstream to convenience a developer. How can the Planning Board approve a plan that not only violates the rules, but the spirit and intent of the ordinances? Sounds like “smoke and mirrors” in the woods!

Pricilla Harrison

Ordinances are ordinances. In an attempt to place a square peg in a round hole, the Planning Board is initiating a misguided change to the zoning ordinances to shoehorn the proposed Maxwell Woods Development into its selected location. This late game rule change would allow the developer to use land that does not qualify in calculating the size of the development. In simple terms, the current ordinances require a tract of land to be a minimum of 5 contiguous acres, the tract proposed in the development is only 2.07 acres. While not against development, changing the rules mid-game sets a dangerous precedent. Applicants should receive Letters page 3

Cape Elizabeth Then and Now: Crescent Beach

By Marta Girouard

Crescent Beach State Park was first suggested for a recreational area to be open to the public in 1939, but it was not until 1959 before plans moved forward and the park opened in 1966. Fifteen families had previously owned the property. During that time, automobiles had been allowed on the beach, as can be seen in the photo above, which is from between 1910-1920 and shows the Kettle Cove end of the beach.

You can see remnants of the stone wall if you look back towards land. That is where the old Ocean House Hotel was located and from where Ocean House Road received its name. The name used to define the whole road from Mill Creek to the hotel, but now there is Kettle Cove Road and Ocean House Road starts at the current town line.

Letters

have to submit a proposal that complies with current and fully vetted ordinances.

The Planning Board should not be crafting 11th hour zoning ordinance amendments that water down the protection of open space to fit an application. This property can still be developed, but within current ordinances simply by reducing the size and scope of the proposal. Please contact our councilors and let them know you oppose this action.

Slow down

Recently, my 8 year old daughter’s kitten was hit and killed on Fowler Road. The person who hit the kitten didn’t stop, didn’t move her from the road, they did nothing.

I can only hope that the person who did this didn’t realize what they had done, but that is highly unlikely. Please don’t speed down Fowler Road, my family along with several others live here. We’re happy to call Cape home and would like our neighbors to treat our neighborhood just as they would treat theirs. Cape offers so much natural beauty, let’s slow down and enjoy it. Thank you.

Michelle Boyer

Maybe not your husband

It’s summer and cyclists are once again prevalent on our roads. Many of us are really nice people and we would like to stay that way. If you are unclear as to how to safely drive around cyclists, then just remember to treat them as if they are your child, wife, husband or boss --- well, maybe not your husband.

Good luck to the Class of 2017 from The Cape Courier!
Marguerite Lawler, oil painter known to many, focuses on landscapes

By Kevin St. Jarre

Marguerite Lawler is an artist many Cape Elizabeth residents know very well. She received a Maine Arts Commission Project Grant in 2016 to create a new body of work, and she is currently working on this project. The paintings are about the wooded environments of Maine both natural and cultivated. Her focus is the effects of mid-day light on the landscape studying the high contrast of shadows and the forms they create.

Her work is representational but not literal. Lawler said, “My paintings are atmospheric, they give you a sense of place without really identifying specifically where.”

When asked if her art has changed, she said, “When my children were young, my time for painting was very limited and structured. Now as the parent of young adults, I can paint whenever and wherever but I still need to structure the time to paint daily.”

When asked if the business of art affects her creativity, she said, “I pulled out of the gallery scene for a few years a while back because it was distracting. The distraction negatively impacted my work and I lost my way.” To regain her sense of purpose as an artist, she undertook a large project that took over three years.

She said, “It helped prioritize what is important to me. I am back showing my work publicly and I am not distracted.” Lawler said, “Publically I am inspired by the visual narrative of the later works of Charles Burchfield and how otherworldly his imagery became with his distinct iconography. The geometry and simplicity of Edward Hopper’s work is remarkable. I wish I could synthesize what I see and experience in my paintings like Hopper, but then again, who wouldn’t?”

When asked if her art has changed, she said, “For the past year I have been traveling to different locations in Maine with three other artists. Two of the artists are printmakers and two of us are painters. We learn from and inspire each other as we draw, paint, and critique together.”

Lawler first earned money through art when she sold a piece of artwork to her high school art teacher. She said, “I remember being nervous about naming a price….I think I charged her $25.”

When asked to choose someplace to focus solely on her art for a month, she said, “I would go to Italy and study fresco. I want to translate my work onto large wall spaces someday.”

Those interested in learning more about Lawler and her work, should know that she is represented by Elizabeth Moss Galleries in Falmouth, Maine. Her website is: www.margueritelawler.com.

Two Cape Elizabeth artists to paint for wet paint auction

On Sunday July 9, recognized local artists Cooper Dragonette and Graham Wood will be featured in Paint for Preservation 2017, the Cape Elizabeth Land Trust’s 10th annual Wet Paint auction. CELT is pleased to welcome both artists to this signature fundraiser that will benefit CELT’s conservation of the shore lands, marshes, farmlands and woodlands that provide scenic beauty, recreational opportunities and important wildlife habitat in Cape Elizabeth.

Inspired by the coast of Maine, Cooper Dragonette has devoted himself to painting the landscape since 2006. Cooper primarily paints in oils and has an affinity for painting en plein air, but also enjoys creating studio works using field studies for inspiration.

Charles Burchfield and how otherworldly his imagery became with his distinct iconography. The geometry and simplicity of Edward Hopper’s work is remarkable. I wish I could synthesize what I see and experience in my paintings like Hopper, but then again, who wouldn’t?”

She said she admires young upcoming artists. “Maine College of Art is a hotbed of creativity and innovation. I admire the learning and vigor I see in the work on exhibit at the school,” Lawler said, and she continued, “The Cape Elizabeth Landtrust Wet Paint Auction is my favorite place to check out the work of other landscape painters.”

As far as inspiration goes, she said, “For the past year I have been traveling to different locations in Maine with three other artists. Two of the artists are printmakers and two of us are painters. We learn from and inspire each other as we draw, paint, and critique together.”

Senior Transition Project students (pictured from front to back) Eli Babcock, Will Corsello, Sam Price, Matt Galvin, Elliot McGinn, and Evan Concannon spent a week pulling invasive plant material (bittersweet, Japanese knotweed, and honeysuckle) at Great Pond, and worked with the entire 8th grade to build 130 feet of new boardwalk and establish a new trail system on CELT’s newly acquired Great Pond Preserve.

I am trying to record the moment, but in the studio I am trying to get back to the place, to the feeling, to the experience.” Dragonette is a full-time landscape painter, teacher, father, and husband (though not necessarily in that order) living and working in Cape Elizabeth.

Graham Wood is a Maine artist who lives in Cape Elizabeth with his wife Lucy Beirne and their twins, Emmett and Edie. He studied at Earlham College and the School of Visual Arts, having grown up in Indiana and Illinois. “In today’s age, there are few places where we can just stop and look for a long period of time. Standing in front of the ocean gives me a meditative time that is hard to find in the daily routine. There is nothing like painting and drawing in nature. When I paint in nature I am inspired by my surroundings and I am trying to capture what I see but also capture that feeling of peacefulness.”

Wood has also been in the picture framing business since 1997, and is owner of Ocean House Gallery & Frame, which is committed to supporting local artists and local businesses. As such, he is also co-sponsor of the event’s People’s Choice Award, which is voted on by auction attendees.

As one of the most anticipated Wet Paint Auctions in Maine each summer, Paint for Preservation presents a diverse collection of works by highly accomplished artists. Over the weekend, 30 participating artists will paint en plein air at designated public and private locations chosen to highlight Cape’s natural beauty. As the date nears, the land trust will publish a map of artists’ locations so that the public may view the artists at work.

On Sunday evening, the newly created, unframed artwork will be auctioned live at a tented cocktail reception at a beautiful private seaside setting overlooking Richmond Island. Smaller works by the artists will also be sold as Mystery Boxes. The reception will feature locally sourced foods catered by Cape Elizabeth native Brett Cary and live music by Cul De Sax, a saxophone quartet.

Tickets are limited and have sold out more quickly each year, so early reservations are recommended. Tickets may be purchased at CELT’s office, 330 Ocean House Rd., online at https://www.capelandtrust.org/paint-for-preservation-2017/, or by calling 207-767-6054.

In mid-June, from Madawaska to Kittery, you can find lupines growing along the roadways. The wild variety has become harder to find. Lupines are known as “wolf flowers” in many languages, but no one is sure why. They can be challenging to start from seed, but once established, they will spread their color far and wide.
At Thomas Memorial Library learn to forage for wild food, try Tai Chi, see more of the night sky, learn about plovers

Learn how to forage for wild food

In this presentation, naturalist and wild food forager Josh Fecteau will inspire you to branch out and try some of the tasty, wild offerings found within and beyond your garden and yards. He’ll discuss his essential foraging guidelines, emphasizing personal safety and respectful gathering, as well as share some helpful tips, including identifying several fantastic foraging teachers, books and websites. Through photos, interaction and stories, Josh will also introduce an assemblage of plants who offer sensory experiences you can’t get from your neighborhood grocery store! Nibbling on wild edible plants is a powerful way to connect with your local landscape. The presentation will take place on Thursday, June 22 at 6:30 p.m. in the library’s Community Room.

Adults can try out Tai Chi

Adults are invited to explore four fundamental elements of Tai Chi Chuan: forms, postures, response drills and self defense techniques. Bring these fun & easy techniques into your daily practice to reduce stress. Carol Mecsas, the Director of Riverview Martial Arts’ Universal Movement program, will lead the program. Carol has a BS in Biology from Bowdoin College, and an MS in Neuroscience from Brandeis University. She has been studying and teaching martial arts for over twenty-five years. The program will take place on Thursday, June 29 from 10:00 – 12:00 p.m. If the weather is nice, the program will take place outside on the library’s front lawn under tents. No registration is necessary.

Special after-hours astronomy program

On his national tour, astronomer Kevin Manning will present a program at the library called “All American Total Solar Eclipse: Looking Into the Mysteries of Eclipses and Other Celestial Events in the Universe!” This exciting family program for ages 8 to 100 lasts approximately one and a half hours, and includes an indoor presentation, followed by time outdoors viewing celestial objects in the night sky through a powerful telescope, such as the rings of Saturn, craters on the Moon, etc., (weather permitting). In addition to current lectures across our nation, Kevin Manning has worked as a consultant with NASA, the Chandra X-Ray Observatory launched on the space shuttle with the Harvard-Smithsonian Center for Astrophysics, and other ground-based observatories and with Brookhaven National Laboratory. This special after-hours event will take place from 7:00 – 8:30 p.m. on Wednesday, July 5.

Learn about endangered piping plovers

Regional wildlife biologist Brad Zinske from Maine’s Department of Inland Fisheries & Wildlife will discuss endangered Piping Plovers in Maine and efforts to protect them, including those right here in Cape Elizabeth. Join us for this month’s entry into the Maine Wildlife Lecture Series to learn about this important species and what you can do to help. The talk will take place on Thursday, July 6 at 6:30 p.m.

Summer story times

The library’s regular summer story times will begin the week of July 3. In addition to weekly programs for a variety of ages, the library will also be offering numerous special events for children and teens throughout the summer. You can find the complete summer schedule on the library’s website, or stop by the library to pick up a flyer.

Outdoor Summer Concert Series

Once again, the Thomas Memorial Library Foundation is sponsoring a summer outdoor concert series. This year, four diverse bands will present outdoor concerts on Tuesday or Thursday evenings, beginning with blues band Black Cat Road on Tuesday, July 11. Other bands featured this year are Duquette, with contemporary acoustic music; the Don Roy Trio, with Franco-American folk music; and Inanna: Sisterr in Rhythm with world music and percussion. You can find the complete schedule of summer concerts on the library’s website.

Puppetry troupe volunteers needed

The library is recruiting middle and high school students to form a shadow puppet troupe called The Shady Characters. The troupe will create shadow puppets and a shadow puppet theater and perform shadow puppet plays for young children several times throughout the summer. Interested teens can find out more by visiting the library’s website, which includes several videos of shadow puppet plays, as well as an online registration form.

Summer reading programs for all ages are underway

The library has a summer reading program for you, no matter your age. Children through grade 4 can keep track of their reading and earn prizes from four different treasure chests, as well as enter a drawing for a grand prize. Teens and adults can engage in different reading activities and earn tickets to win drawings for themed prize boxes, as well as a grand prize. Registration for the programs began June 19, and will continue through August. Stop by the library any time during library hours to register.
